IMPORTANT MAJOR INFORMATION

Education is more important than ever and UCLA's School of Education and Information Studies is at the forefront of that conversation. As the top-ranked public program in education in the nation, the Department of Education is guided by a commitment to integrate theory and practice and to improve educational practice and policy. The department attracts prominent scholars and is internationally recognized for its research centers in evaluation, higher education, child development, and urban education. Whether students choose to pursue a PHD, an EDD, Masters or Bachelors degree, or a teaching or administrative credential, they graduate with a broad understanding of educational theory and tested practice.

The Department is known as a leader in the study and practice of urban education, student testing and assessment, teacher and continuing education and development (particularly in urban, multi-ethnic environments), early childhood development, and issues of access, equity, and quality facing K-12 and higher education. Here, faculty and students work together to solve the most pressing issues facing education today. This collaborative, dynamic environment helps students develop the skills they need to become leading education professionals in the 21st century.
