Rady's Technology, Innovation & Supply Chain Minor combines theoretical concepts and practical skills that allow students to focus on value creation, managing relationships with diverse people in diverse functions, industries, global locations, and leveraging technology and data analytics to create the best supply chains. Supply Chain also spans to virtually every industry, not only including manufacturing and distribution-based industries, but also industries such as Banking which require Supply Chain skills for planning, supplier sourcing and management, process design, information flow management, procurement, and cash management. Supply Chain consulting is a huge and growing business. Globalization, technology, and changing customer expectations push the profession to seek people who can pioneer the intersections of the supply chain with the Internet of Things, artificial intelligence, the cloud, and data security. The minor consists of twenty-eight total units that span the various key fundamentals of the industry.
